Apostrophes for Contractions and Possession

As well as using apostrophes for contraction, we can also use them to mark possession.

A possessive apostrophe is used to show when something (a noun) owns or possesses something else.

Example: Jane's hair is brown.

The apostrophe shows that the hair belongs to Jane.

Read the sentences below. Some use apostrophes to mark possession and some use them to mark a contraction. Sort them into two groups by putting a P in the box for an apostrophe to mark possession or a C to mark contraction.

Astronaut

In 1961 on the 12th of April, a Russian man called Yuri Gagarin became the first human being to travel into outer space. Eight years later, a man called Neil Armstrong became the first human being to walk on the moon and step onto another world away from the Earth.

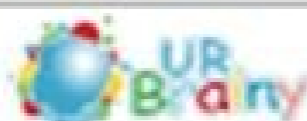

Astronauts or cosmonauts are trained to pilot, command or work as a crew member of a spacecraft. They can also perform scientific experiments, repair damaged satellites and collect information about other distant planets and stars.

Space has a very dangerous place for a human being. For this reason, astronauts wear space suits which allow them to breathe if an accident does occur a space suit for protection, they would explode. This is because there is no atmosphere in space. The human body would not be able to function without the presence of the Earth's atmosphere.

Second World War: Evacuees
English worksheets from twinkl.com

When war broke out in 1939, the British government decided to send children living in the big cities to safety in the countryside because they thought that the Germans would bomb the cities rather than villages. Nearly three million people were moved from the cities to the countryside at the beginning of September 1939. It was known as Operation Pied Piper.

The children, who thought it was a holiday, were often sent in their school classes, with their teacher, on a train or bus to quiet country villages. Some mothers accompanied their children and were evacuated themselves. The children were luggage labels with their names on and had their gas mask slung over their shoulder. Each child was supposed to take with them a spare pair of shoes and socks or stockings, two sets of underwear, pyjamas or a nightdress, handkerchiefs, a sweater, a thick coat, a towel, soap, hairbrush and a comb, toothpaste and a toothbrush. Unfortunately many children from poor areas didn't own some of these things and so were unable to take spare shoes, coats, toothbrushes etc.

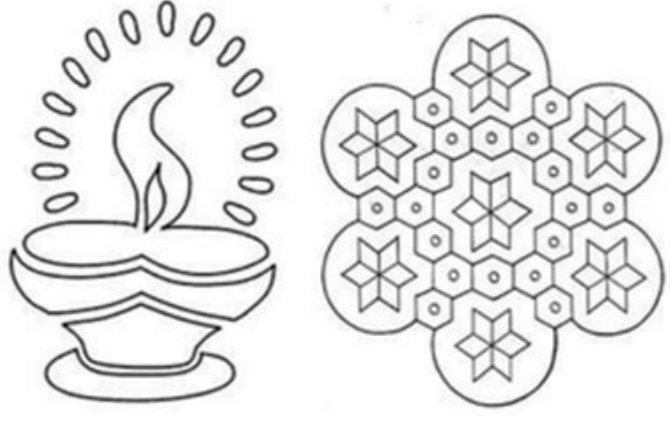

Once at the village, the locals would often come and choose which evacuee they wanted. As an incentive to take in evacuees, the billeters (families who took in evacuees) were paid ten shillings and six pence each week to take in a child, with an additional eight shillings and six pence for each extra evacuee they took. Many evacuees suffered from homesickness, they missed their parents, the city and their friends. The billeters also found it hard adjusting to having evacuees, they were shocked that some of the children were dirty, had rats, and used bad language. Can you imagine how your parents would feel if they had to look after someone else's child who hadn't had a bath for weeks and would swear at them? The other problem that many villagers found was that some evacuees were pickpockets and they stole things. Some evacuees simply had the time of their lives being in the countryside. They saw farm animals which they'd never seen before, they were able to play in the countryside and get lots of fresh air.

Several thousand children travelled to countries as far away as Canada, the United States and Australia. For some this was the best thing that had ever happened to them; they were well looked after and enjoyed a great life. It was a real shock when four years later they had to return home to England and parents they hardly recognised or remembered. For others evacuation proved traumatic as they were made to work hard and were not treated well.

Nothing much happened in the first few months of the war it was called 'The Phoney War' and so people thought it was safe to go back to the cities. A lot of evacuees went home at this time. Then the real war started and those who were still evacuated remained where they were for the duration of the war. Finally in May 1945 as the war ended, the government decided it was safe to start sending evacuees home. Children from London and Hull were sent home first because those cities were still considered dangerous. Some children couldn't go home, either because their homes had been bombed, or their parents had abandoned them. After the war there were about 38,000 unclaimed evacuees.
